Kinley Salmon is an economist, journalist, and global affairs analyst who brings a unique perspective on geopolitics, economic development, and technological change.

He currently serves as Latin America correspondent for The Economist, based in Montevideo, where he reports across the region on economics, politics, and security.

Before joining The Economist, Salmon worked as an economist at the World Bank through its Young Professionals Program. In that role, he focused on economic development and private-sector growth in emerging markets.

Earlier in his career he worked as a strategy consultant at McKinsey & Company, advising governments and organizations across Africa, the Middle East, and South Asia.

He is also the author of Jobs, Robots and Us, a book exploring how artificial intelligence, automation, and robotics will reshape labor markets and the global economy.

Educated at Cambridge University and Harvard University, Salmon combines rigorous economic analysis with the narrative clarity of a journalist.
